The world is rapidly developing. We believe science (natural and physical sciences) is serving the world to open its eyes towards radical and rational development. On one hand science is broadening the horizon of our knowledge of the natural and physical world and on other hand it is rapidly changing our views regarding religion, spiritualism, and philosophy.

Guru Nanak neither established any physical laboratories nor did he perform experiments to generalize any principle, yet his subjective study of the outer and the inner world revealed conclusive and ultimate truth which science is still realizing today.

How the objective studies of various fields of modern science (which developed after his time) can be helpful to understand philosophy of Guru Nanak embodied in his Bani will be discussed in this paper.
